

300 Word NATIONAL HERO or QUAID-E-AZAM Essay

A national hero is an individual with extraordinary qualities. He has the power to shape the destiny of his country. There have been many great heroes throughout history, but Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah is our national hero. He is the founder of Pakistan and the savior of hundreds of millions of Indian Muslims. It is called the best statement of its time.

Only a few have managed to gain control of a large country like Pakistan through peaceful means. He was born in Karachi on December 25, 1876, in the house of a businessman named Jinnah Punja.

He went to England to study law after completing his university studies. He returned to Bombay as a barrister and began his practice there. He soon made a name for himself as a lawyer. He entered politics in 1905. He joined the Indian National Congress to liberate his country from British rule.

Initially, he was a strong supporter of Hindu-Muslim unity. But soon, he found out that his Hindu leaders were narrow-minded, and they did not give a fair deal to the Muslim League. He was recognized as a defender of Muslim rights.

"Hindus and Muslims are two separate nations and can no longer live together," he said. He worked for a separate homeland for Indian Muslims, which he finally got on August 14, 1947. He became the first Governor-General of Pakistan. But day by day, the pressure of his work affected his body, and he died on September 11, 1948.

Death did not allow him to work for the development and glory of his country. Quaid-e-Azam had a character. Even his opponents acknowledged his honesty and integrity. He is the hero of our great freedom.
